emc style works xt download full versionQ: How to make a Perl script wait for a TeX file to be loaded? I want to develop an automatic way to apply a global change in the template file in an article. The work flow consists in : * Invoke an external script * run a perl script * run a Tex Live * run a perl script * run the article I use the Perl script (which is a global change) to bypass the first.tex file and then run the article directly. Here comes my problem. If the external script is not loaded successfully, I want to wait for it to be loaded (i.e. until the Perl script runs). My first idea was to use the Perl file from CPAN: Wait. Wait::Simple will be executed in a loop, until I send the "END WAIT". Do you have a better idea? I'm also looking for a way to add some output, for instance to write to a file the first Tex file that is loaded, the first Perl script that is run and the last Perl script.

Thanks. A: Startup can do this: Wait::Simple calls Perl's Perl_waitpid system call. Check the return value: use POSIX; use Fcntl; my $success = Perl_waitpid(-1, 0, WNOHANG); die "failed to waitpid: $!" unless defined $success; You can then use $success to make sure your external tool is ready. A: If the external script is not loaded successfully, I want to wait for it to be loaded My approach would be different here. Why go through the hard-work of starting, stopping, loading, and unloading the external application (which will probably generate a lot of warnings) when you can just as easily load the external application when you start the Perl script? If you're really worried about the perils of starting and stopping the external application, I would recommend looking at the Win32::Console::Wait module. Federal Express Fleet Services provides cover for all deliveries made by FedEx in Ireland by providing emergency fuel transfers for fuel purchased by FedEx. Fuel transfers in Ireland are subject to the Irish fuel transfer legislation. This legislation was introduced in 2007 and takes the form of the Motor Fuels (Fuel Supply) Act 2007. Vehicle Operator If your vehicle is not equipped for emergency fuel transfers, you must be a fuel vehicle operator with the national transport authority.

This means that, if requested by FedEx, you will supply the fuel for all your deliveries. Fuel Operator If your vehicle is equipped for emergency fuel transfers you must be a certified fuel transfer operator. This means that you are an approved fuel transfer operator for the national transport authority, who has been trained and certified for the profession. Liability You are legally liable for supplying the required fuel and returning your vehicle to FedEx for fuel. Emergencies If an emergency occurs outside normal business hours, contact FedEx on 1800 21111 or 000 in Ireland. Payment If you are already a fuel operator, the charge for emergency fuel transfers is based on a flat fee for the size of the tank. This is €24.50 (€14.75 with a 5% discount for senior drivers) plus VAT for each hour of transfer. This rate does not include the VAT registration of your vehicle, training and certification costs (if applicable). Travel Charges If you are not already a fuel operator, the charge for emergency fuel transfers is based on a flat fee for the size of the tank. This is €30.00 (€15.00 with a 5% discount for senior drivers) plus
